A dinosaur runs on a treadmill, no signs of anxiety, it runs, stumbles, it continues to run. A text falls down on him, it overwhelms him, without altering its pace. A race by inertia, certainly not a demonstration of physical prowess. An incessant running, avoiding obstacles. Running to reach an aim that escapes and ends up coinciding with the race itself.

The idea came to us during the first lock-down, we all thought about how chaotic life in cities like Milan used to be. We felt like the Chrome Dino, an easter egg that Google Chrome engineers put into their browser and with which users can play when there is no internet connection. A dinosaur runs in the desert, avoiding the cactuses, its only purpose is to keep running, endlessly: "Dear user, even offline you can occupy your time, as long as you run".

The desert here is a green screen, as a contemporary place of possibility where everything can happen. It awaits any content that can change the current landscape. Nothing happens, only hints and shades of green.

In Andrà tutto uguale the dinosaur runs and lots of words, the obstacles, fall out on it; a stream of doubts, of unsaid banalities, mixes with some reflections on the several meanings of the word Stress Test. The text, as if it were a dialogue, is interrupted from time to time by the answers created by an online AI text generator.
